is no proposal under consideration of the Government to scrap the policy governing location of industries. Under the new Industrial Policy announced by the Government on 24th July, 1991, in locations other than cities of more than 1 millon population, there will be no requirement of obtaining Industrial approvals from the Government except for industries subject to comulsory licensing. In respect of cities with population greater than 1 million, industries other than those of a non-polluting nature will be located outside 25 Kms. of the periphery, except in prior designated industrial areas. However, existing zoning and land use regulations and environmental legislations will continue to regulate industrial locations. An entrepreneur is free to take decisions with repard to the location of an industrial unit as long as it conforms to the locational policy outlined above.
